Roger Penrose's Prologue in his famous book
Emperor's New Mind

Penrose's story in the Prologue is as follows:
The greatest super computer in the world is being inaugurated—a machine that could handle several billion calculations in a microsecond. Pose any problem, and it would not even be a split of a nanosecond before the answer is flashed on the screen. As a novel way of inaugurating the computer, the someone from the audience was asked to put the first question, but none in the audience dared to appear stupid before this supra-intelligence that was near-omniscience. Then something amazingly funny and serious at the same time happened!
